

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 13, 2024

It is my honor to recognize the 75th anniversary of the U.S. General Services Administration (GSA).

Since it was established on July 1, 1949, GSA has set the standard for Federal Government operations. By promoting a more productive federal workforce, streamlining the acquisition process for the Government and its partners, and improving interagency cooperation, GSA has played an indispensable part in making sure the sacred cause of democracy forever remains in the hands of “We the People.” GSA’s thousands of employees are essential to my Administration’s work of building a better future for our Nation. As they enhance energy efficiency in federal buildings, support the transition of the federal fleet to clean energy, implement transformative technological initiatives that are improving the lives of countless people across the country, and so much more, these women and men are helping to deliver on the promise of America for all Americans. I am grateful for their efforts, and I look forward to seeing the progress they will continue to foster for the United States.

On this historic anniversary, I would like to thank all the employees of GSA—past and present—who do so much to keep our country running. The hard work of these public servants is a big reason why I have never been more optimistic about the future of this great Nation.
